Calhoun County farmer Jimmy Sikes is proud to show off his newest venture, which he calls "farming the sun."

Farming the Sun

Solar Farms May Be Golden, if Site is Suitable

By Marsha Hewitt,
Editor, SC Market Bulletin

After decades of row crop farming—peanuts, cotton, corn, soybeans and wheat, Jimmy Sikes was planning to retire. His 1600 acres in Calhoun County near St. Matthews had been in the family for generations, but a bad knee encouraged his decision to spend more time with his family and less time on the farm.

A phone call led him into a totally different direction: solar farming.

Jimmy didn't know much about solar farming, but a company from North Carolina contacted him about leasing some of his land. He told them to come on and he'd talk to them. He figured he didn't have anything to lose.

Originally the company wanted to lease about 65 acres, but after seeing his farm, they upped the offer to 130 acres. Sikes' rolling land just off Hwy 601 was close enough to a substation to make their investment worthwhile. The arrangement, which pays by the acre, suits Jimmy just fine. The company has a 20-year lease on the land, with an option for extensions.

On this farm, thousands of deep blue solar panels—which look like glass but are actually aluminum—cover a former peach orchard. The panels are precisely aligned to follow the sun as it crosses the sky. A network of tiny wires in each panel channels the UV rays into on-site transformers. The transformers then send the energy to inverters, which convert it from DC (direct current) to AC (alternating current).

The electricity is sold directly to SCE&G through a nearby substation. If the station is too far away, it is simply not feasible to construct a solar farm. Sikes explained that it would be like trying to push water through a garden hose—the longer the hose, the less pressure is maintained.

The company started construction on Sikes' farm on March 8, allowing time for the many government regulations. "They did all kind of studies, from an archaeological survey to checking for Indian artifacts," he explained. By September, they were generating electricity, enough to power about 3,000 houses.

Sikes recommends that any landowner interested in solar farming do plenty of research. "You figure out if it's what you want," he said. "It's your land, so you need to negotiate ahead of time to protect yourself." Once he was offered a contract, he studied it carefully then rewrote a lot of it, postulating that corporate executives don't know anything about farming.

Now, both parties are satisfied. The solar farm is up and running, and Sikes doesn't have to do any maintenance on the property. Not only did the company install a tall chain link fence around the property, they are responsible for cutting the grass and keeping the site weed-free.

The solar farm leaves Sikes free to enjoy his retirement. "I call it 'farming the sun,'" he said.

The solar panels on Sikes' farm rotate to follow the sun. Even in cloudy or overcast weather, the ultrasensitive tracking software keeps the panels facing the sun.

Global Food Forum

A couple of weeks ago I attended the Global Food Forum in New York City. Yes, this farmer from Bowman was in the big city to discuss agriculture and where it's going in the future. Editors of The Wall Street Journal convened leading executives in agribusiness, food production, consumer products and government to explore key challenges and opportunities in the food industry.

The focus of the Forum – the intersection of food and technology – drove home how the food sector is being transformed by innovation. Hot topics included GMOs, food trade, automation on the farm, and the impact of Washington on the farm economy.

While listening to these speakers from highly influential companies like ADM, Monsanto, and Tyson, I learned a great deal about what the future could hold for agribusiness. I hope to incorporate many of these ideas and advancements into our department's future initiatives.

I attended a session on GMOs in which "The Next Chapter" was discussed in detail by representatives from Dow, Dupont and Monsanto. Proponents of genetically modified crops say they have boosted harvest and have made farming more efficient. In another session, Scott Gottlieb, Commissioner of the US FDA, gave a talk on food regulation.

This topic is very relevant for South Carolina right now because of the Food Safety Modernization Act.

The most interesting sessions I attended were about technology and new agriculture practices. One discussion that stood out was the advancement of robotics in milking cows! I also learned about the use of Controlled Environment Agriculture (CEA) technology in vertical farming. In addition to high-tech practices that allow vertical farms to grow as much produce as more traditional farms five times their size, I was particularly interested in one vertical farm in Wyoming that employs individuals with disabilities.

Vertical Harvest in Jackson Hole, Wyoming employs people with Down's syndrome, autism, and other conditions. This is just another example, like the Global Food Forum, where agriculture can bring individuals from all different backgrounds together.

It's exciting to be the Commissioner of Agriculture during a time when technological advancements and agricultural practices are more and more integrated. My top priority, as always, is to help the hard working farmers in our state find new and efficient ways to do the good work they do. Now, more than ever, the pace of change of agriculture is something we need to be aware of.

Agritourism Event

Celebrate America! Military Timeline Weekend, Reenactment

Nov. 4 at 10 am to Nov. 5 at 6 pm

Let's celebrate America and our military history! In addition to all farm fun and maze activities, this weekend we host a Military Timeline Event. This includes Revolutionary War, Civil War, WW1, WW2, Korea, Vietnam and modern era exhibits and encampments.

Take a step back in time and talk with the reenactors about these important times in our American history.

Civil War Reenactment Skirmishes will take place on Saturday and Sunday at 3 pm. Cannons will be fired (please bring earplugs if necessary).
